RULES MURDER MYSTERY GAME “THE UNINVITED GUEST”

Game format Murder Mystery “The Uninvited Guest”

Murder mystery games come in various formats. “The Uninvited Guest” murder mystery has a fixed script with ten suspects. The game consists of script booklets, an audio script, and guidance/presentation by a game host. Participants themselves recite and portray the script, so there are no actors playing the roles.

Always played centrally

The game is always played centrally, in a plenary manner with the entire group. All players can portray a role, regardless of the group size.

The game is divided into an introduction, three game rounds, and the finale, providing plenty opportunities for players to be in the spotlight. However, participation in acting is never mandatory; if you prefer to observe rather than perform, that’s perfectly fine.

Pre-assigning Roles

Roles can be assigned either on the spot but it’s much more enjoyable to do so a few days before the game, using a special invitation. The invitation includes instructions, but we will explain how role assignment works here.

For instance, if there are 15 participants, you assign the ten characters to ten participants, leaving five people. These remaining five are assigned random sub-roles, each performed with another participant. Who does what and when will unfold during the game.

In larger groups, certain roles may be played by three or four individuals, which still works well and can enhance the fun.

Double roles only occur in groups of eight or nine people, where one or two players respectively take on two roles.

Can we dress up?

Absolutely! Dressing up is optional, but those who wish to embody the style of their character can do so, from subtle to extravagant. The invitation for “The Uninvited Guest” provides detailed character descriptions, appearances, and clothing suggestions.

In the case of eight or nine people, players with “double roles” choose one outfit or switch outfits during the game.

Who is the culprit?

In some murder mysteries, participants playing the role of the culprit know from the start that they are the murderer. While this creates a suspenseful atmosphere, it also deprives those players of the chance to actively investigate the crime, since they already know the facts. Therefore, in Murder Mystery Game “The Uninvited Guest”, the identity of the culprit is kept secret from everyone, including those portraying the role of the murderer. This keeps the game exciting for all players until the end.

What to expect from “The Uninvited Guest” Murder Mystery?

- Pre-game excitement in role assignment and potential dressing up.
- Guidance and presentation by a game host who manages the timing of the game and dinner, instructing, motivating, and entertaining you.
- Game booklets for all participants, including scratch cards and the humorous script.
- Unexpected acting performances as participants act out the story themselves.
